

ENGLISH ADVOCATE OF VOTES FOR WOMEN WILL SPEAK HERE

Daughter of Emmeline Pankhurst, Twice Ar- rested for Loyalty to Cause, to Lecture at Garrick Theater.

Miss Sylvia Pankhurst, English suffragist, artist, historian, agitator and educator, will deliver a lecture in the Garrick theater next Sunday afternoon. Brought up in a political atmosphere, Miss Pankhurst from early childhood determined to be a painter, and to practice her art for the furtherance of political and social ideals. But she has never hesitated to lay aside her palette when the "Votes for Women" cause, with which her family name is so prominently associated, has needed her help in other ways.

She joined with her mother and sister in forming the original Woman's Social and Political union, and while still a student at South Kensington, became the first honorary secretary in London of that famous militant society for the enfranchisement of women. She was among the early prisoners for the cause, a fate which has twice overtaken her. So great was Miss Sylvia's popularity on her former visit to America that although she delivered more than 50 addresses, she was able to accept only a portion of the invitations which poured in from all parts of the continent.

Her lectures attracted so much attention that when passing through Des Moines, Ia., she was invited to address the legislature in joint session. She spoke from the speaker's rostrum and was the first woman to address that house since

She was 24, Anthony, 30 years before. She also made an address in the legislative chamber at Lansing, Mich., by special invitation, being the first woman to do so. In Colorado, she was asked by the speaker to give an account of the English woman's movement to the legislators at Denver. She was also specially invited by members of the Massachusetts judiciary committee to address them during the Boston hearing, the anti-suffragists and the suffragists each giving up a portion of the time in order that she might speak. At St. Louis she addressed 600 prominent business men.
